Religion Of Reason Out Of

Hermann Cohen's Religion of Reason, Out of the Sources of Judaism (first published in 1919) is widely taken to be the greatest work in Jewish philosophy and religious thought since Maimonides' Guide to the Perplexed. It is at once a Jewish book and a philosophical one: Jewish because it takes its material from the literary tradition that extends from the bible to the rabbis to the great medieval philosophers; philosophical because it studies that material in order to construct a worldview ...

Religion of Reason - Hermann Cohen - Oxford University Press

His solution was to present a religion of reason, i.e., one that was philosophically grounded but which drew support from selected sources of both the biblical and the rabbinic traditions. In practice this meant the explication of particular texts within the logically sequential exposition of a philosophy of Judaism.

Central to their theologies of history is the "positive" nature of the Christian religion over against the Enlightenment's "natural" religion of reason. This positivity is articulated in three basic metaphors: the kingdom of God, organic life, and education, which together provide a narrative structure for understanding the life of the individual Christian and of the Christian community in its relation to the Old Testament and to world history.

Religion tells us that Christ was born from a virgin. Reason teaches that this is impossible. The Bible says Christ made wine out of water. Reason denies such a thing is possible.

Religion is Contrary to Reason

It is a proper function of reason to elucidate experience, including the religious experience. Reason interprets; reason discerns meanings; reason makes explicit that which was only implicit. And if you want an example of this as it applies to religion, go back to first century Athens and listen to a man named Paul.

Reason is the greatest enemy that faith has; it never comes to the aid of spiritual things, but more frequently than not struggles against the divine Word, treating with contempt all that emanates from God. Whosoever wants to be a Christian should tear the eyes out of his reason. Reason should be destroyed in all Christians.
